When Dr Livingstone returned home in 1856, after having crossed the continent of Africa, a deep interest was excited in behalf of the inhabitants of the countries through which he had travelled

H. M. Government
having laboured for many years, to suppress the slave trade on the Coast, determined to send out an Expedition into the newly discovered one object of which should be to cut off regions, with the view of cutting off much of 2.

that unlawful traffic at its source

It was hoped that by opening the country to enterprising traders and Philanthropists, and inducing the natives to cultivate Cotton and other products, that labour would become valuable, and men and women be no longer sold as slaves, to toil in Foreign lands, but remain at home to labour for their own benefit, ^{as} ~~and~~ ^{well as} ~~well as~~ for that of the countries which should purchase the raw materials of their industry.

The Expedition was placed under the Command of Dr Livingstone, who was accompanied by a Scientific Staff for working up the Botany, Geology, Natural history &c of the Country.

The first object was to explore the Zambesi and its tributaries, to find out whether they could be used as highways, for Commerce and Christianity to pass over into the vast interior

A small steamer was built for the navigation of the River;

Two years supply of such provisions as could not be obtained from the natives, were provided, with beads, brass-wire and calico, the ^{usual} common currency of the ^{country} people; also arms and ammunition for procuring fresh meat and for self-defence.

The Expedition left Eng. in March 1858 in the Pearl with the steam launch on her deck, and ^{arrived} ~~anchored~~ ^{at} the mouth of the river in May. As the low mangrove coast runs E and W. and no distinguishing mark exists, some difficulty was felt in ascertaining the true month. The water, ^{with} ~~having~~ ^{bits of} floating brushwood on its surface, was discoloured five or six miles from the coast. The yellowish green tinge was succeeded by muddy water resembling that of a river in flood

The two colours did not intermingle they simply met, and the line of contact was as sharply defined as when the ocean meets the land

We ^{went into} entered the Luabo, ~~a tidal river~~, put the launch together, ^{but} finding that ~~this~~ was ^{only} a tidal river which did not communicate with ^{any other,} the Zambesi we left and entered the Zambesi by its Kongoni mouth. This has a better bar

^{the East Luabo,} than the East Luabo, the main channel of the East Luabo. It has a depth of nearly two fathoms at low water, and the spring tides rise from 12 to 14 ft..

X The delta of the Zambesi is made up of grassy plains and mangrove-swamps, the latter being intersected by numerous creeks.

^{Temperate}
When a native of ~~the~~ North first lands in the tropics, his feelings & emotions probably resemble, in some respects those which the First Man ^{may} ~~must~~ have had on his entrance into ^{the garden of Eden} ~~Paradise~~. ^{enters} He has set foot in a new world, another state of existence is before him. Every thing he sees, every sound which falls upon the ear, has all the freshness and charming novelty. The trees and the plants are new - the flowers and the fruits - the beasts, the birds and the insects are curious and strange. The very

- glowing with colours sky itself is new, and sparkles with constellations never seen in northern climes.

The ~~temple~~ is separated by
- a belt of mangroves from the Bay of East of is four miles ~~from~~ the Milanbe or west branch and ^{seven} ~~six~~ ~~from~~ East Lake.
Timue
which is 5 from the ~~entrance~~.

Narrow grassy plains skirt the shore, and behind these lie the mangroves country which furnished a secure retreat for game, mosquitoes and fever.

We saw but few natives and then, by fleeing the moment they caught sight of us, gave unmistakable indications that they had no very high opinion of white men. They were probably fugitives from Portuguese slavery.

Buffaloes ~~and~~ ^{and water hogs} three kinds of Antelope, were abundant, and the latter easily obtained a few hours hunting provided resistance enough for a score of men for several days.

Large herds of water-but Kossus Elypsigimnis feed on the plains, when they want fresh pasture, they wait on the bank till the tide is low ^{then} And swim the river with the greatest ease. These animals are somewhat difficult to kill, and seem at times to have as many lives as a cat.

A shot in the neck is generally fatal, but they have frequently gone off, as of an hunt, with two or three Enfield bullets through other parts of the body, a fine male ram full speed, upwards of two hundred yards, with part of the heart blown out ^{by} ~~in the~~ Jacob's shell.

Near the sea the meat ~~was~~ ^{is} always juicy and well flavoured, reminding us of beef, but in the interior, the deer of the same kind of antelope ^{is} ~~was~~ so dry and tough that it last even our black men, though far from being overnice, refused to eat it, and we gave up ^{quit} shooting the water buck altogether. It was only after ^{eating} shooting it in the interior that we understood why Capt Harris has so low an opinion of it.

The ~~ox~~ Red buck commonly lies close in the long grass during the extreme heat of the day and waits till the hunter is near before bounding and uttering his whistle & warning off. In the morning & evening the pretty spotted buck buck Antelope sylvatica Sylvatica

not a short distance out of the manifolds to feed. The water--buff keeps the open plains, and seldom lies down during the day clear windy In ~~some~~ days all the game are extremely wild and wary stalked; can only be approached with the greatest difficulty; while ^{on a trail} the ~~day before or the day after they~~ ^{approached} might be stalked with ease.

~~It is difficult to ascertain the cause of these fits of temporary shyness.~~

A few leopards and troops of monkeys find food and shelter among the mangroves.

The muddy ground under these trees is covered with solitary crabs which quickly slink into their holes on the approach of danger.

A curious little (Goby?) like animal fish swarms in the numerous creeks which intersect the mangrove swamps.

When alarmed it hurries across the surface of the water ⁱⁿ by a series of leaps. It may be ^{considered} rather amphibious as it lives as much out of the water as in it.

Its most busy time is at low water. Then it appears on the sand or mud near the little pools of water which are left by the retreating tide.

It raises itself on its pectoral fins into something of a standing attitude and with its large ~~and strongly~~ pro-jecting eyes keeps a sharp lookout for the light-coloured fly, on which it feeds. Should the fly alight at too great a distance for even a second leap, the fish moves slowly towards it, like a jumping spider, and as soon as it gets within two or three inches of the insect, by a sudden spring, generally embues to pop its singular mouth directly over the unlucky victim.

~~This jumping fish~~ ^{the} is a pugnacious little fellow. a rather prolonged fight ^{once} was observed between two in fleeing from an apparent danger one ~~had~~ jumped into a pool of a foot square which the other evidently regarded as his by right of prior discovery.

73 ~~a actual possession~~. In a twin Kling the owner, with eyes flashing fury and ^{dorsal} fin bristling up in rage, dashed at the foe. The fight waxed furious. No tempest in ever equalled

a tempest ~~could~~ compare with the storm which swept off that inland sea. The waters were now in the water, and arose out of it, for the battle rages on sea and shore. They struck hard, they bit each other with like becoming exhausted they seized each other by the jaws like two bull dogs, ^{then} ~~and~~ paused as if for breath then went ^{and} at it again as fiercely as before until the combat ended by the precipitate retreat of the invader.

When the ebbing tide retreats, myriads of crabs emerge from their underground quarters and begin to work like busy bees. Soon the many miles of the smooth sand become rough with the products of their labour. They are toiling for their daily bread. A round bit of moist sand rises out of the mouth and is quickly brushed off by one of the claw arms, a second bit follows the first, another and still another ^{come} as fast as they can be laid aside. As these pellets accumulate the crab moves sideways and the work continues. The first im-pression one receives is that the little creature has swallowed a great deal of sand before coming out of his hole, and is getting quit of it as rapidly as possible. A habit he sometimes in-

- dulges in of darting into it ^{at intervals} occasionally, as if for fresh supplies ~~is apt to~~ tends to strengthen this idea; But the size of the pile formed in a few seconds, shows that this cannot be correct, and leads to the belief that ~~although~~ animal ~~had some means~~ ^{not readily} ~~not readily~~ seen at the distance he chooses to keep the observer. This animal ~~has been~~ ~~way~~ of raising the sand to his mouth which it passes to ^{whatever} ~~have~~ the animal ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~contains~~ ^{contains} ~~it~~ ^{it}.

At times the larger crabs indulge in a musical concert & from each crab emanates a strange, pleasant note as if like the symphony of a quiver for very joy they dance.
 The wild ~~peeps~~ ^{wants} ~~seem~~ ^{must} to be ^{musical} very fond of these ~~larger~~ ^{musical} crabs; ~~and~~ dig them out of the sand during the night and devour them.

Shoals of small fish abound in the shallows between the Kongone and the ~~bay~~

This is the favourite fishing station of a large flock of pelicans during the summer they remain on the coasts. These birds destroy an immense number of fish. ²¹ They breed on one of the Caribbe Islands in May In proceeding up the river we pass through the low level mangrove swamps.

The Kongone branch is some thirty miles long and is a small stream. Its upper half is through a narrow canal, and of which it falls into the great Zambezi.

The mountains, near the lake are succeeded by vast level plains which are covered with the gigantic years. The ground has been very dry and the grass is it has become dry. These fires prevent the growth of timber, but a few trees grow among the more humid hills such as the Forsteria fiercely in our faces with his bow and poisoned arrows; he was stopped in the midst of his performance by an old man who ordered him to sit down and not talk to strangers in that way.
